Gradient overlay The Gradient Overlay filter allows you to choose a gradient in one of two ways. You can either apply a gradient directly to an image and have it adjust automatically, or first create a gradient, then apply it to the image. You can further change the type of gradient, and you can adjust the colors by using the Gradient Swatches window.

Photoshop is an indispensable tool in anyone's work. It is part of a computer's basic functions and it's widely used for all kinds of tasks. Whether you are creating a new photo, a new website design, or designing a logo, Photoshop is an essential tool. In this article, we'll discuss more ways of using Photoshop to save time and create beautiful design. Applying Photoshop Actions to a new photo Photoshop actions are pre-recorded effects that are applied to images through a series of steps. They help save time for repetitive tasks, such as applying a blur, exposure and color effects. There are many actions available in Photoshop, and the most common ones are button actions and layer actions. Creating a button action You can create button actions that will act on a specific selection. Use the arrow keys to select an area and press Enter to select that area. Once you've selected the area, click the Edit ? Define Action... button. In the Actions tab of the dialog box that opens, choose Button and press OK. Photoshop Elements offers 7 base actions, including the most commonly used basic actions such as Brighten, Contrast, etc. If you wish to add more functionality, go to File ? Scripts ? New Script. In the Create Script window that opens, type the name of the action you would like to create. Click OK. Once the script is created, you can preview it in the scripts tab. The Script Name and the number of frames inside the script, such as 10 frames or 100 frames, appear automatically. You can delete unnecessary lines and change the settings for each frame if required. Adding a layer action to a new photo A layer action is similar to a button action; however, it uses a layer instead of a selection, and you can use the buttons inside the Action Options dialog box to apply the action. Select the layer you wish to apply the action to, click the Actions tab in the Action Options dialog box, and choose Layer Action. Click OK. You'll find a ton of options in the Actions tab. Note: When you create a script, Layer Action is automatically selected. The following are the types of actions available: Frame You can make an action run multiple times by setting the number of frames inside the a681f4349e

The use of the epidermal growth factor receptor as a target in breast cancer treatment. The epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) is a receptor tyrosine kinase encoded by the c-erbB-1 proto-oncogene. It is overexpressed in many solid tumours including breast, and its normal expression is restricted to embryonic and proliferating tissues. This discovery has raised considerable interest as to whether the receptor is a target for anticancer therapy. Initial studies have been initiated in breast cancer, mainly using the monoclonal antibody (MAb) cetuximab (IMC-225). Cetuximab has been shown in patients with advanced breast cancer to exhibit beneficial responses in terms of progression-free survival and overall response rate. The use of the receptor for breast cancer therapy is still in an exploratory phase and, most importantly, the optimal dose of the drug must be determined. In contrast to the non-small cell lung cancer, inhibition of cell growth and induction of apoptosis by cetuximab appears to be independent of p53 status. Preclinical and early phase clinical trials are currently investigating other anti-EGFR MABs and a combination of these with chemotherapy.
