Gigabit Ethernet over Copper Gigabit Ethernet over Copper (GEOC) is an extension of the Fibre Channel over Ethernet (FCoE) standard (IEEE 1594a) that specifies Ethernet data transfer at a rate of 1 gigabit per second (Gbit/s) instead of 10 gigabits per second (Gbit/s) that is the traditional Ethernet rate of data transfer. GEOC is the formal name of the protocol that enables FCoE to function over the existing installed infrastructure of copper-based and fiber-optic networks. It also enables N-to-N connectivity, which is sometimes called full mesh. GEOC is based on the Fiber Distributed Data Interface (FDDI) standard. It is commercially available in 2009. Technical standards FCoE FCoE specifies FDDI as the physical and transport layer protocol for Ethernet. To function over other transport media such as copper or fiber, a FDDI adapter is required that acts as a translator between the lower protocol level and the upper Ethernet protocol. The original FDDI specification was published by the FDDI Special Interest Group (SG) in 1993 as SDI-1. In November 1995 the SDI-1 was extended with more Ethernet definitions, the SDI-2. SDI-2 was quickly developed into a standard by the same SG in March 1997 as ANSI/IEEE Std 100-1988, otherwise known as IEEE-1588. The FDDI SG worked at the time as part of the IEEE 10GE technical committee. In November 2001 the original FDDI standard was 3da54e8ca3
