According to the district's Director of the Fire Department, the plan has recently been revised in response to similar lawsuits in federal court, and was promulgated in an attempt to reflect the most current applicable standards. Until the plan is certified, however, it is not considered to be in compliance with the provisions of the ordinance. [4] The District and its board members are sued in their official capacities. [5] In particular, the court found that the District had not considered or analyzed three technical feasibility issues: (1) the increased risk of fire at its high-intensity day care centers, particularly its "tubs," (2) the increased risk of fire as a result of the facility's poor operating and maintenance record (specifically, the District's negligent supervision), and (3) the increased risk of fire as a result of the facility's inherently unsafe physical design (specifically, the inefficient use of space, the lack of a fire wall, and the defective windows). [6] We observe, however, that Rodeffer also refers to federal standards for adult day care centers. Those standards have not been adopted, and the District has no intention of adopting them. [7] As we have already recognized, this Court is "not bound by decisions of the federal courts when we render decisions under our own state law." Id. at 711, 679 A.2d at 914 n. 1. In any event, it appears that the reasoning of
